

The Scots Worthies (Classic Reprint)

Howie (Huet?), belonging to the Albigenes in the south of France, were obliged, towards the close of the 12th century, to seek refuge in this land from the storm of Romish persecution. One of them settled in the parish of Mearns; another in the parish of Craigie; while the third took up his abode at Lochgoin, a lonely farm-house in the parish of Fenwick, between Glasgow and Kilmarnock, still occupied by his descendants after the lapse of about 700 years. From its situation in the very heart of a wild moorland waste, as well as from the religious character of its inmates, this humble dwelling became a favourite resort of the Covenanters during the period of persecution; and, indeed, there are few places in the West of Scotland, the bare mention of whose name recalls so many associations of covenanting interest. Here were often assembled many of those faithful witnesses of Christ, whose lives are briefly recorded in this volume; and many an incident of thrilling interest happened at this lonely spot in the moors of F (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
