

Tracts of the American Tract Society, Vol. 11: General Series (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Tracts of the American Tract Society, Vol. 11: General Series But this brief sketch has quite another aim. It intends not to excite its readers to this summer pilgrimage, though it does ask the privilege of going with them; more particularly, with those who declare plainly, that they seek a country - not on earth, but in heaven. It may, or may not be, that the pocket-library of the traveller contains sufficient detail as to the routes, the expenses, the rules and customs to be observed, the sights to be enjoyed, and the dangers to be shunned. Probably there is, by this time, counsel enough on the score of health, economy, and expedition. But is there any treatise, large or small, which sets before the tourist the advantages and difficulties of the journey with reference to his eternal state? The Christian knows, at least he must have heard, that in leaving his settled habits, and venturing into the whirl of travel, he is exposed to unusual danger in his spiritual prospects. This is the uniform and emphatic testimony of all who have tried it. A gentleman from South Carolina, who recently visited Philadelphia as a lay-delegate in an ecclesiastical body, stated to the writer, that the hurry and bustle which filled his eyes and ears, and the whole tenor of conversation around him, relating to no higher interests than those of money, pleasure, and politics, all combined to unfit him for his sacred duties, and almost disposed him to turn about, and travel home as rapidly as he came. On the other hand, there are special benefits to the Christian tourist, such as he only can enjoy, and such as he ought to be well apprised of, lest he lose them.
